Will-O-Whisp

👁 21 ✓ 1 ★ 5

Chapter 1 by PyromaniacSoap

People say that they lead you to your fate, and all that crap. Sorry to burst your bubble but that is incorrect. Very incorrect. In fact all they really do is kill you. Kill you dead. They lead you along 'til the sky ain't blue no more, then, BAM! Yer deader than that door nob on the wall that's probably behind you. All you see is blue light and that ain't even pretty blue light. It's the scary kind that wakes you in the middle of the night. So, no. Don't go chasin' Will-o-Whisps whenever you are 'apleasen.

Chapter 2 by R

Down in the swamps when the fog grew thick people used to take 'em for lanterns. Now they take 'em for Fae and the like, as if there are tiny sprites that will lead them to safety. Nah, as if there are tiny sprites that can lead you to your destiny.

Destiny. Pah. It's always been a load of bull. Yet every night you can tell at least one romantic-hearted child has wandered off in to the swamps, hoping to see the lights and walk their way out of whatever problem has left them weak-souled.

But I've got one job and one job alone, to walk in to the swamp when the night grows dark and the fog grows thick and to find the Will-o'-Whisps that the children do.

It's hard work. The whisps lead you through the cities and the parks and the flowering fields at dawn. They're a kind. Their whispers are seductive, almost. They can lead even the hardened astray.

I'd say someone has to do it, but that isn't true. It would be fine if no one was there to lead them away from the whisps. Their fault for entering the swamp, some would say.

But I do it anyway.

Even when it gets hard.
